June 1995

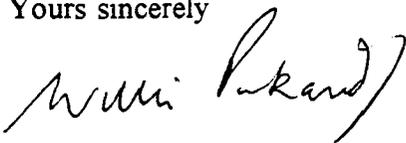

Dear Sir or Madam

I would like to draw to your attention a conference sponsored and organised by the TES Scotland about how reform of local government is affecting education. The timing - Thursday, September 21 at the Royal Scottish Academy of Music and Drama in Glasgow - is intended to allow the speakers to discuss the position as it appears six months or so after the elections for the new authorities.

The aim is to attract senior people in different areas of education, including members of the new councils, officials and headteachers and their staffs. The cost, as you will see from the enclosed leaflet has been kept to a modest £15, including lunch!

I hope you will consider booking a place and that you will also draw the attention of some of your colleagues to the event.

Yours sincerely

Willis Pickard
Editor

PROGRAMME 10.00am - 4.00pm

By the early autumn, vital decisions will have been taken about the organisation of education following the election of the new "shadow" councils in April. Councillors will have been nominated to committees looking after education. Senior officials will have been appointed.

By then too, it will be clearer how some contentious issues are likely to be resolved - for example, provision of special needs, the advisory service, maintaining children's involvement in the performing arts.

The TES Scotland's Conference "New Horizons in Scottish Education" will look at the future of the education service in a practical way, without losing the need to maintain a vision of what it should be aspiring to achieve.

SPEAKERS:

The speakers have been chosen for their breadth of experience and involvement in policy making and decision making. They include:

George Robertson, Shadow Secretary of State for Scotland

Elizabeth Maginnis, Education Convener of the Convention of Scottish Local Authorities

Douglas Sinclair, Secretary General of the Convention of Scottish Local Authorities

Two panels will consider the audience's questions and views on: The funding of the service/Educational issues

THE PANELLISTS INCLUDE:

Richard Blackburn, Chief Executive of Banff and Buchan

Judith Gillespie, Convener of the Scottish Parent Teacher Council

John Mitchell, Headteacher, Kilsyth Academy

Astrid Ritchie, Chairman of the Scottish Conservatives' Education Policy Committee

The conference is aimed at: councillors, senior officials, headteachers and others interested in how the education service is set to evolve in the years ahead.
